ABOUT SCOTT

In 2014, Scott Colby took a volunteer trip to Guatemala to help build schools. During his time in Guatemala, he became close with both the students and their parents and was shocked by their overall positive demeanor. That trip to Guatemala left Scott feeling conflicted. He couldn't understand why the kids and parents in Guatemala seemed so happy, despite having so little, and yet a large percentage of people here in America struggle to feel even slightly content on a daily basis.

After learning about the positive benefits gratitude can have on people, such as more joy, happiness and optimism, he decided he wanted to create a gratitude movement called Say It With Gratitude.

Scott now delivers amazing talks about gratitude across the world to organizations and schools that inspire change.
